This Week in Wabash

Hello, Wabash,

Happy Monday. Happy Valentine's Day. I hope those of you in relationships remembered your significant others. And I hope those of you who aren't have planned a fabulous day for yourself. It's cold, but the sun is shining outside my window. So, we've got that going for us, at least.

Apparently there was some sort of football game last night during the rap concert I was looking forward to. (I kid, I kid.) But, if you know me at all you know I care not for sports, but care very much for music. Anyway, as someone who graduated high school in 2001, last night's Super Bowl halftime show featuring Dr. Dre, Snoop Dogg, Eminem, 50 Cent, Kendrick Lamar and Mary J. Blige was custom-designed with someone like me in mind. I really did enjoy it as much as a truncated medley performance can be enjoyed.

However, I just have to say that my number one, all-time favorite Super Bowl halftime performance was Prince's from 2007. Just a look at the set list should give you an indication of how awesome it was: "We Will Rock You," "Let's Go Crazy," "Baby, I'm a Star," "Proud Mary," "All Along the Watchtower," "Best of You" and "Purple Rain." That's covers of Queen, Creedence Clearwater Revival, Bob Dylan and Foo Fighters, mixed in with some of the Purple One's best. Oh, and did I mention it was raining when he was performing "Purple Rain"? Just an epic moment. I hate to be traitor to my generation or whatever, but how are you going to top that?

Anyway, that's all I have for you this week. I'll be back with you again next week.

Best,
Rob
